AI and I:

Wonder

Create

Work

The emergence of Generative Artificial Intelligence (AI) services allows anyone to generate any type of content (text, images, music, videos) by simply typing what they need. Generative AI tools such as ChatGPT and DALL-E are prime examples of platforms that are already part of the fabric of work for millions of people. Such rapid development has sparked excitement but also generated concerns about possible negative impacts. It has also raised more fundamental questions about what, if any, distinguishes us from the machines we have created. What traits of human work make it ultimately irreducible to even the most sophisticated AI engine? In this exhibit, we invite visitors to experience first-hand generative AI in action, understand what opportunities they open up to support everyday work, their limitations, and “hallucinations,” and explore how using generative AI can reawaken what is distinctively human in what we do.
